COMMUNITY EFFORT REAPS REWARD

Members of Canning Club at Work.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

Fruits, vegetables and meats preserved, pork sausage and lard made in a community cannery at Atrisco, Bernalillo county, New Mexico, last year, represented a total value of about $28,000. There were also 1,212 pounds of fruits dried, 1,220 pounds of vegetables, and 3,400 quarts of vegetables were brined, as a result of extension teaching in the county through which the idea of having a community cannery was formed.

Families Clubbed Together.

The cannery cost about $400. Twenty families clubbed together about a year and a half ago to build it. The women all belong to the Housekeepers' club, and all use it. The kitchen is well equipped with built-in cupboards, tables, handy pump, drain and a large pressure cooker. A kitchen range is used for heating, which was found more satisfactory than a gasoline burner.

A report received by the United States Department of Agriculture states that after the establishment of the cannery it was decided to build a community room adjoining it. This was intended also as a rest room and a place for all kinds of entertainments. The building material and equipment for a clubroom 30 by 22 feet with hardwood floors and composition walls came to $500, which was raised by home cooking, food sales, entertainments, and contributions. The men agreed to do all the work of building, hauling material and finishing the grounds.

Community Celebration.

As the work progressed somewhat slowly some of the women offered to assist. Twelve of the Housekeepers' club members appeared with well-filled baskets for the midday lunch. They nailed on the siding while the men placed frames for windows and doors. A community celebration was held when the building was completed.

CORN ON COB IS NOT CONVENIENT TO EAT

Roasting in Old-Fashioned Fireplace Is Popular.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

Green corn, like many other vegetables, is at its best when freshly gathered. Corn on the cob is not very convenient to serve or eat, and this method of cooking it would doubtless have been abandoned long ago if cutting the kernels from the cob before cooking did not materially modify the flavor. The most convenient way of cooking corn on the cob is ordinarily by boiling, but in old-fashioned fireplaces roasting was a favorite method. This still survives as a common household practice in some localities and also in campfire cookery.

Boiled Corn on the Cob.

Free the corn from husk and "silk." Have a kettle of water boiling hard, drop the corn into the water and cook ten minutes. If only a few ears of corn are put in a kettle of boiling water, the temperature is very much lowered and the time of cooking must be increased. When possible, surround the corn with a generous quantity of boiling water. Be careful not to cook sweet corn too long, or it is likely to be tough and tasteless.

The United States Department of Agriculture suggests that when corn and potatoes are to be cooked at one time, six to eight ears can be steamed in the same kettle in which the potatoes are boiled. Lay the ears over the potatoes in rapidly boiling water and cover the kettle tightly.

Corn Cut From the Cob.

Corn may be cut from the cob and heated with butter, pepper, and a little milk. Use either raw corn, or, better, corn that has been cooked on the cob for five minutes in boiling water to set the juice. With a sharp knife cut through the center of each row of grains and with the back of a case knife press the grains of corn from the hulls. Put the corn in a saucepan and season with salt, pepper, and butter. Add enough hot milk to moisten well, and cook ten minutes. Serve at once.

Another method, sometimes known as "Maine style," is to cut the grains directly from the cob without scoring and scraping, and to season and heat as above. This is a good way to utilize left-over cooked ears.

Succotash.

To a pint of corn cooked as above, or to the same amount of canned corn, add a pint of cooked and seasoned shelled beans, usually lima beans.

HIGH QUALITY SOFT DRINKS

Fruit Beverages Have Been Improved and Standards Raised as Result of New Data.

The quality of fruit beverages has been improved and the standards raised as the result of data gathered by the bureau of chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture in its research work on fruit juices and carbonated beverages and the industry may be extended through the more general use of these data.

Nearly every ingredient used by bottlers has been studied—sugar, acid, water, flavors and fruit juices. Methods have been devised whereby the detection of flavors as genuine or im-tation is assured and satisfactory formulas for the preparation of a number of beverage flavors have been developed. It has been found that by replacing one-half the sugar with honey, sirup manufacturers can improve the quality of such soft drinks as root beer, sarsaparilla and chocolate at an increased cost of approximately 0.3 cent a half-pint bottle, with no decrease in food value. Since the clearness and palatability of the finished beverage depends largely on the water used, the chemical composition of 70 city water supplies in the United States has been ascertained.

Work on the production of a new carbonated beverage with cassina as its base has been started and it is believed that this new beverage-producing plant has great possibilities as a soft drink of the cola type.

USE MILK IN CREAMED DISHES

Various Ways Outlined of Adding Real Food Value—Amount of Salt Will Vary.

Milk toast, cream soups, creamed vegetables, creamed fish and scalloped dishes are all good ways of putting more milk into the daily food of the family. The milk for all of those is thickened into a sauce, thick or thin. The amount of salt needed depends to a certain extent on the material with which the sauce is served. Potatoes, for example, would need plenty of salt, while a thin milk soup might not require so much. The following directions are given by the United States Department of Agriculture:

To make the sauces, melt the fat, stir in the flour, add the milk gradually and cook until thickened, stirring constantly unless you use a double boiler.

Thin White Sauce.

1 cupful milk 1 tablespoonful fat
1 tablespoonful flour ¼ to ½ teaspoonful salt.

Medium White Sauce.
1 cupful milk 1 tablespoonful fat
2 tablespoonfuls flour ¼ to ½ teaspoonful salt.

Thick White Sauce.
1 cupful milk 1 tablespoonful fat
3 tablespoonfuls flour ¼ to ½ teaspoonful salt.

For milk soups, milk toast and with vegetables use the thin sauce. For scalloped or creamed dishes use the medium sauce. The chief use for the thick sauce is as a binding material in croquettes and loaves.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Don't sweep carpets with dirty brooms.

Too much salt hinders bread from rising.

Scraps of pastry make nice little cakes for tarts.

The meat will harden if the stew cooks too quickly.

Soda dissolved in hot water will stiffen brush bristles.

Many stains, especially fruit, can be removed by soaking in rain water.

Add pinch of salt to flour before mixing with water to avoid lumps in gravy.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Timothy Trained to Serve.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Ministry as a Life Work.

I. Timothy's Parentage (Acts 16:1). His father was a Greek and his mother a believing Jewess. On his mother's side at least, he had a godly ancestry. Usually the mother makes the son. Two generations of maternal pious grandmothers were back of Timothy. How thankful we ought to be to God for a godly ancestry. Christian heredity and training constitute the essential elements for a Christian life.

II. Timothy's Training (II Tim. 1:5; II Tim. 3:14-15).

His wise and faithful mother and grandmother carefully nurtured him in God's Word. He knew the Scriptures from his childhood through their training. The faith which came to him from his grandmother through his mother did not come through the laws of heredity, but through careful training and teaching. Grace is not reasoned by the laws of heredity. The factors involved in his training were godly ancestors, a Christian home, and a diligent study of the Scriptures.

III. Timothy's Call (Acts 16:1-3).

While on Paul's second missionary journey in company with Silas, Timothy was found at Lystra near Derbe. Perhaps he had been converted on Paul's first missionary journey, but bearing a favorable report of him by the brethren, Paul took and circumcised him so as not to offend the Jews, because his father was a Greek. This was not contrary to the decision of the Jerusalem council. It was a case where conciliation could be made without compromise of truth. From this time to the end of Paul's life, he and Timothy were boon companions. They were as a loving father and a dutiful son.

IV. Timothy's Character Reticent.

1. Of a Reticent Disposition. II Tim. 1:3. Timothy had received a gift from God at the hands of the apostle, but it needed to be stirred up, that is, fanned into a flame. Such a temperament would mature in touch with a great personality like Paul. It is highly important that everyone store up the gift which God has given unto him.

2. Courageous. II Timothy 2:1-8. Having been stirred up, he was freed from the spirit of fear and deliberately identified himself with Paul in his sufferings and trial. Courage is greatly needed in doing the Lord's work.

3. Faithful. He tarried in the difficult field of Ephesus through many years. He was the only man of the needed fidelity to minister to the Philippians. (Philippians 2:20). The secret of his faithfulness in such a position was his fidelity to the Word of God.

V. Timothy's Ministry.

1. As a fellow-missionary with Paul. (Phil. 2:22).

2. As pastor of a church at Ephesus. Here he labored for many years tactfully meeting the difficulties of that great church. The Christian minister should believe in the Scriptures as God's Word and be able to rightly divide it so as to meet the needs of those who hear him. This is the only way to meet the difficulties that arise in the pastor's labors.

All Due to Christianity.

We live in the midst of blessings, till we are utterly insensible or their greatness, and of the source from which they flow. We speak of our civilization, our arts, our freedom, our laws, and forget entirely how large a share of all is due to Christianity. Blot Christianity out of the page of man's history, and what would his laws have been?—what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our daily life; there is not a familiar object round us which does not wear its mark, not a being or a thing which does not wear a different aspect, because the light of Christian hope is on it, not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity, not a custom which cannot be traced, in all its holy and healthful parts, to the Gospel.

Responsibilities.

Responsibilities gravitate to the person who can shoulder them and power flows to the man who knows how.—Hubbard.

Avoid Making Enemies.

Those whom you cannot make friends of, avoid making enemies—Epicurus.

The Weak.

The weak may be joked out of anything but their weakness.—Zimmermann.

THE STORY THUS FAR

SYNOPSIS.—On the isolated Meager ranch, on the southern border, Deborah Meredith, trained nurse, is in attendance on Mrs. Meager, whose husband has recently been killed. Immediately after the death, Bob Meager, Mrs. Meager's stepson, arrives and takes possession. He insults Deborah and she resolves to leave, but there seems no possibility of her getting away. Meager gloats over Deborah's plight. He tells her he has sent for a justice of the peace, who will marry them tomorrow. Horrified, the girl seizes a revolver. The justice, Cornelius Garrity, scoundrel and bosom friend of Meager, arrives with a party, among them the "Frisco Kid," notorious desperado. Despite Deborah's protests, the justice performs the marriage ceremony. She escapes and reaches her room. There she stuns Meager with the revolver and rushes to the stables, hoping to secure a horse and escape. There she meets the "Frisco Kid." Somehow he inspires her with confidence and she explains the situation. The "Kid" tells her his name is Daniel Kelleen, that he is no friend of Meager. They ride off together into the desert. Presently she realizes that Kelleen is the "Frisco Kid," but doesn't fear him. Deborah hears the story of the "Frisco Kid." Kelleen disappears and Deborah is seized by a man who carries her to what is apparently a cave.

Deborah's searching eyes, now able to distinguish objects with some clearness, scanned the rock walls to the obscured entrance. At first she could not be sure, but finally the vague outlines of the man seated on the rock became visible. He was huddled forward in such grotesque posture as scarcely to appear human, but gradually the girl realized what the uncouth shape must be, could even detect the long, scraggly beard, the great breadth of shoulders, and the rifle, on which he leaned. With this discovery came the instant assurance also that the fellow slept soundly. A thrill of hope brought courage, and new strength to her limbs. Might it not be possible for her to steal forward silently, and then, with a sudden spring, clear the obstruction of vines, and gain the free day without, before the slumbering guard could even comprehend what had occurred? The horse was not a hundred yards away, and even if she had to leap boldly from off the shelf of rock, she would willingly dare all for a chance at escape. Yet she had not advanced three steps until she realized the impossibility of the effort—the sleeping body utterly blocked the passage.

She could perceive the fellow now with some distinctness, a giant of a man, with long, apelike arms, bare and hairy, an oddly formed head, almost pear-shaped, long hair shading the face, and a black beard sweeping to his knees. Slowly, silently, without actually knowing why, the girl drew back into the deeper darkness behind her, guiding herself with one hand against the rough wall. Into her mind had come the faint hope of another egress somewhere, the very purity of the air suggesting such a possibility, she even imagining she felt a draft upon her cheek. Yet there was no glimmer of light. Once her groping foot struck against fragments of rock left lying where they fell. She bent down better to assure herself of the obstruction, and her exploring fingers touched a pick. It was a mine, then; this secret excavation had been man's work; Nature may have pointed the way, but this tunnel itself originated through lust of wealth. Her captors were not outlaws but men crazed by fear of losing what they had uncovered in these rocky hills. Yet this knowledge rendered her situation no whit less dangerous.

Deborah crept forward over the pile of debris, discovering that this fall of stone did not denote the ending of the passage. Suddenly her groping hands revealed a sharp curvature in the tunnel, and she worked her way about the corner with utmost caution. Then she stopped, rooted to the spot, her heart almost ceasing to beat. Far above, up what appeared to be a sharply inclined chute through the solid rock, came streaming down a single ray of daylight, its faint reflection resting directly upon the upturned face of a dead man, stretched on the tunnel floor.

Deborah, startled, swayed back against the wall for support, staring down into that white, upturned face, clearly revealed within the little pool of light. It was the face of a young man, his dark, wide-open eyes staring blindly up into vacancy, his brown hair cut short, almost good-looking even in death, with cheeks freshly shaven. This last was what aroused the girl, brought her back quickly to life and action. He had the appearance of having shaved that very morning; the stubble of his beard was not even visible. Then she noted two other facts—his revolver was in the holster at his waist, and the hand, held upright against the side wall, grasped a folded paper. He had just been killed, not more than two hours before surely, and in no duel—perhaps he had fallen to where he lay while climbing that narrow passage above. But the wound? There was none visible—not even a bruise on the face. As a woman, Deborah shrank from touching the body, but her training as a nurse instantly conquered. She must learn the truth, disagreeable as the task might be. On her knees, exerting all her strength, she partially turned the body—the man had been shot in the back. She seemed to comprehend it all in a flash, visioning the scene as she rose quickly to her feet. He must have done the deed—that older man with the beard—shooting treacherously from behind. It had been deliberate murder. But the purpose was not so clear. To all appearances the assassin had never even approached his victim after he fell. Confident of the deadly accuracy of his aim, he had left the inert body lying where it struck, untouched, not even the dead man's gun being removed from its holster, or the folded bit of paper released from those gripping fingers.

The unspeakable, treacherous horror of the act appalled Deborah. There must be some reason behind it all. It was too cold, cruel, deliberative not to have definite cause. No speculation now could solve the mystery, but the murderer still lived; he was back yonder in the darkness she had just left. He would no more spare her than he had shown mercy to this other victim. If he still slept she must take advantage of the moment for escape—the one chance upon that long passage toward the gleam of light at the top. She stepped across the dead body, grasping her skirts tightly in one hand; then hesitated for an instant, obsessed by a new thought. Perhaps that paper might explain all, might prove the very key to all this mystery. She bent, and wrested it from out the stiffened fingers, hastily endeavoring to learn what it contained. It was a thick, tough sheet, the folds showing yellow and dirty as though it had been carried a long while, and there was writing inside, in fine penmanship, but so indistinct her eyes were unable to decipher a single word in that dim light. She thrust it into the bosom of her blouse, her eyes anxiously searching the only possible way out.

It scarcely promised even that, as revealed by that single ray barely illuminating the passage. Apparently an irregular sized hole, worn between layers of solid rock by the action of water, it led upward at a sharp angle, and, while wide enough at the lower extremity to permit the entrance of a full-grown man, seemed to contract at the upper opening so as to make it very doubtful if an ordinary body could squeeze through into the open air beyond. Yet Deborah felt that she had no choice but to accept this single chance of deliverance. She could not remain there with the dead man, nor retrace her steps backward to where the murderer remained asleep on guard. Her belt was still about her waist, but its holster was empty. Before beginning to climb, she drew the dead man's gun from its scabbard, and stuck it into her own. As she did so the light from above glimmered on a pearl-studded handle, and a barrel of blue steel.

At first the climbing was not difficult, the slope gradual with the walls sufficiently wide apart to afford comparatively easy passage. Drawing herself forward by her hands, with feet groping in the darkness below for any projection against which they could rest, she won her way upward, almost inch by inch, soon creeping over a narrow shelf, able, finally, to sit upright within a shallow niche at one side, where the stone had been hollowed out for a few inches. She was breathless from the hard climb, her heart beating rapidly. She could see nothing, hear nothing, yet her mind pictured again the dead face of that boy staring up at her—she could not go back to that! Nor to that other living horror beyond! She must go on; better to die there, caught helplessly in that rocky hold, than ever to fall again into the power of that beast. She listened intently, hearing nothing; then lifted her hands to feel upward. She lifted one foot, seeking a fragment of rock to rest upon. Then a flare of red lit the inferno, a dull, muffled report echoed along the imprisoning walls, and a bullet brushed her hair, flattening itself on the rock beyond.

She shrank back into the little niche, scarcely certain of her escape, and rested there on her knees, not venturing to move. The shot had come from below; of that there could be no doubt, but there was no other report, no movement to reveal any presence. Deborah had no question as to who had fired—it must be the man she had fled from in the outer cave. He must have seen her outlined against that round opening above. It was a miracle she had escaped; but to have seen her the fellow must have stood directly beneath, beside the body of the dead man. Perhaps he would be there still, peering up to learn the result of his shot, wondering where she had disappeared so quickly. She was safe enough where she was, behind that barrier of rock, and she drew the revolver out of its holster, and listened eagerly for any sound of guidance from below. If he made any effort to climb up, she meant to shoot to kill.

She dare not venture to advance her face around the rock edge, for fear the movement might bring her into view against that vista of light. The fellow was evidently waiting and watching just as she was, disconcerted by her strange disappearance. No doubt he half believed his bullet had found its mark, that she had fallen, either wounded or dead, into some crevice, but was afraid as yet to venture up that narrow tunnel. She could not remain there indefinitely waiting for him to gain courage to attempt the ascent. Her hand, with the weapon in it, reached noiselessly out beyond the edge of the rock, and pointed downward. A stone rattled below and her finger pulled the trigger.

The muffled report echoed back from the rocks, the red flash of the discharge faded into darkness, and the pungent smoke blew back into her face; but there was nothing else. No cry, no crunch of a falling body, no thud of lead. She listened helplessly, half crazed to empty every load from her poised weapon into that silence below. What could it all mean? What had happened behind that black veil? An hour passed, an hour of dreadful watching, of tense expectation. It seemed to her the blue light streaming through that opening was already losing its power, as though the sun was going down. If she would escape she must go while she could yet see the way. Desperate as the chance was, it must be accepted. She did not look down, or permit herself to think of the possible danger lurking below, with lips closely pressed together, and heart beating rapidly, she drew herself up, inch by inch, bracing her body against the side walls as though

She Listened Eagerly for Any Sound From Below.

In a chimney, making use of every projection as a support to either hand or foot, and thus steadily approaching the opening overhead. Her courage had returned; there had been no attack from beneath, no evidence of life.

Deborah reached the end of her climb breathless, her limbs aching from exertion, her heart sinking with dismay. It never could be accomplished, the passage of her body through that narrow opening to the world without. How sweet the fresh air felt; how beautiful the blue arch of sky, yet it was hopeless of attainment. The very madness of the thought proved her salvation. Crazed for the moment, she began to dig fiercely with her fingers at the obstruction, tearing at a projecting point of rock, which suddenly yielded to the furious attack, a stream of loosened sand pouring after. Little by little, madly tearing at the sides of the orifice, she managed to wear away every fragment back to the solid rim of rock. She unbelted the revolver and flung it through the opening; then drew herself upward, fearful every instant of being irretrievably caught, yet finding purchase below for her feet sufficient to thrust her slender body steadily forward. At last her shoulders emerged into the outer day, and she was enabled to drag the rest of her body over the rim of rock. Utterly exhausted, Deborah lay on the sand, gasping for breath, conscious only that she had found refuge in a shallow ravine. She lay there outstretched in the shadow of a steep bank, without strength even to lift her head.

CHAPTER XI

More Complications.

Deborah felt that she never would regain power to rise, yet this total exhaustion passed away, as she began to breathe more easily, and finally she sat upon the sand, gazing about her strange surroundings, eager to discover what she could attempt next. She had escaped from that hell underground, yet was but little better off than before. She was upon the edge of the desert stretching outward toward the Meager ranch. It would be impossible to cross this on foot, with neither food nor water to sustain her; nor could she for a moment contemplate seeking refuge there, even if it were possible. Her only hope was to circle that hidden chasm, and then endeavor to find her way north until she reached some human habitation. The hope of accomplishing this was the merest mirage; the attempt probably meant death. She had no horse, no food, yet somehow, in the exhilaration of that first moment of release, she could not wholly despair. God had been good; she would go on courageously, and trust Him.

She arose to her knees, and looked about. It was a lonely, contracted scene, amid which she was concealed. Some rift in the rocks led down to that opening through which she had just crept. Perhaps it had formed a watercourse in other ages, but now the sand of the desert had drifted in, and covered all with a yellow mantle of desolation. The sides were too steep to scale even on foot, the loose sand foiling every attempt, so she was compelled to follow the course of the defile in seeking a way out. For the first few yards of advance the girl had no suspicion she was not alone. A patch of sagebrush limited her view, and she was threading her way through these, when the sound of a voice speaking caused her to crouch suddenly in the midst of the thicket and lie motionless, scarcely daring to breathe. It was the voice itself which paralyzed her every volition, a voice instantly recognized, never to be forgotten—the voice of Bob Meager.

He was not dead, then; the blow struck had no more than stunned the man, and—she was his wife. Deborah's fingers dug at the sand in sudden agony, as the hideous thought came home anew to her mind. In some mysterious way he must have discovered what had occurred, suspected that she and Kelleen had ridden away together, and then followed like an Indian on the trail. She lifted her head suddenly; another voice spoke quietly, indifferently. Surely the voice was familiar; it must have been Kelleen himself who spoke.

She crept forward inch by inch, crouching low behind the sage until she could see the figures of two men. Neither one faced her; Meager sat on the side of the bank, his horse grazing just beyond, while the "Frisco Kid" remained in the saddle, his mount still breathing heavily, as though he had only just arrived after a hard ride.

"Well, what difference does it make?" he asked quietly. "Am I in on this or not?"

"Of course you're in now," was the surly response. "I reckon that was what caused you to show up in these parts, ain't it? I wondered what was being pulled off when you rode in last night. Say, 'Kid,' who really piped it to you—Casebeer or Garrity?"

"The less you know about that the longer you'll live, Bob," Kelleen replied calmly. "It is enough that I do know, not only what you are up to out here, but that it was also your game to double-cross me. You tried the same game once before, Bob. The scheme has never worked very well. You haven't got the brains to do it with. Casebeer never told me anything; nor Garrity. All I needed was to know you and your kind. You were never honest in your life, and when I heard about this deal it was easy enough to figure what was up."

"What deal, 'Kid'? What do you mean?"

"This ranch inheritance Garrity fixed up so nicely for you. No, I haven't all the dope—not yet. But I'm on my way to it, all right; the rawest deal I ever heard about, and it will blow up like a punctured balloon just as soon as your stepmother gets nerve enough to see a good lawyer. That's true, ain't it, Bob?"

"The old man left it to me."

"Yes, he did—not. I was down in old Mex when I first heard what was going on up here. Young Clair got hold of one end of the story somehow, and told it to me. You remember Clair?"

"He worked here on the ranch."

"Yes; that's what made him talk. He's square, that kid, and you fired him, and every other American on the place; then put on Mexicans. That made him sore. When he told me that I came pretty near knowing what was up."

"You did, hey! Wanted a hand in the game?"

"Why shouldn't I, Bob? I held you up when you was flat, didn't I? There is no reason why you should forget me now. D—n you! I mean to see that you don't. That's what I'm here for. Now listen—I'm on to what is going to be pulled off tonight—this Casebeer business. You sent Sanchez and his helper over here to take care of the Casebeer outfit—that's right, isn't it?"

Meager growled something indistinctly, his eyes angrily watchful, but Kelleen remained on guard.

The Addict.

"Do you play golf?" inquired one of them.

NEW STRAIGHTLINE COATS FOR TRAVEL

Wrap-Around Garment and Egyptian Embroidery Bid for Favor

The new straightline wrap-around coats with Egyptian embroidery running horizontally are the latest thing in travel coats, writes a fashion correspondent in the New York Tribune. One designer makes a cape of dark blue serge that extends to the waist in front and to the knees in back, flaring in a circle. A scarf of red and black folds around the neck and hangs down to the hips on the side front, being held in place by the belt of the dark blue dress beneath.

There are as many ways of varying the cape suit for travel as there are couturiers in Paris, but the general rule is that it must be made of some practical wool material, with the cape not more than hip length in front. The scarf, in combination with the cape, is seen on many of these models.

Suits for travel have short coats and plain, rather short skirts. They are very trim and very untrimmed, except for unusual stitching, braid and buttons. The pocket is usually a feature of these suits, and if it is inconspicuous it is advertised by the use of a decorative little handkerchief. Leather for travel suits is sometimes used. Another designer makes suits of suede that are very smart and useful.

There are long wraps for the journey which are loose affairs with fur collars. These are very bold in effect, having wide ten-inch stripes of

Jacquette Is Knitted in Odd Loose Stitch

In tangerine and nickel gray, with solid gray collar, cuffs and bottom, this knitted jacquette will appeal to many young women.

Many Kinds of Gloves to Please All Tastes

Fancy gauntlet gloves, very short, with flared cuffs elaborately embroidered, or in double or triple tier effect, sum up the fashions in gloves.

The white glace kid glove embroidered in color or in black, with fancy gauntlet cuffs, is the newest note, and is worn irrespectively with long or short-sleeved gowns.

Mastic suede gloves in two-tone effects, namely, stitched in a darker tone in tan or brown silk also are fashionable. Two-tone and two-color combinations are very good; also black with a color, or white with a color.

Multi-colored embroideries are used in novelty gloves sold by the high-class specialty shops. There is less demand for black glace kid, although novelty gauntlets in glace kid embroidered in colored silk and in metal are still represented. No gloves are worn with evening dresses.

Utility Coat Likely to Be Fall Favorite

Pile fabric coats featuring, for the most part, straight lines with fur collars and cuffs, form a large group in the fall models. Another group consists of models developed in another type of utility coatings suggestive of, in the misses' sizes, a school type of garment, and in the women's, a practical coat for all-weather.

Camel's hair cloth, plaid fabrics and in special group plaid-back cloth form the array of mediums used for these coats, which for the most part are marked by convertible collars of generous size, with large patch pockets, such as are indispensable in the topcoat. Others are developed in straight, semi-wrap lines.

Fur collars finish many of these models, foxes appearing often in the assortments.

Let in the Sun.

In the old days, blinds and curtains were kept down in the home to exclude the sun for fear its rays would fade some precious carpet or rug. Now sun and air are welcomed gladly and people live longer and better because they know better.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

More Elastic Being Used in Wearables

More and more of women's clothes are being "made on elastics," and this simple arrangement is a decided improvement over old-fashioned, complicated fastenings. One never hears of any woman wanting to go back to using a multitude of pins, still there is the question, "How do you manage the elastics in your camisoles and bloomers? Do they always go to pieces in the first washing?"

A little care and thought expended in the purchase of this very necessary little article in the first place would eliminate half of the future trouble. The characteristics of a good elastic, for which you are to look when shopping, are a fine strong yarn used in its construction, and which insures you a neat, compact fabric; and a rubber which is sturdily elastic when stretched.

The difference in the way elastics are made divides them into two types, the woven and the braided.

Wide elastics, and that used for arm bands, garters and hose supporters, are usually woven. To make this woven elastic, the warp threads of yarn, and of rubber are set up on the loom together, the rubber being stretched to equal the length of the yarn threads. The yarns used in making elastic webbing may be cotton, mercerized cotton, artificial silk and silk. Good yarn has a lot to do with the wearing quality of your elastic. The "filling" or weft threads are put in in such a way that they are held in place by being woven through the warp threads, and so as to cover completely and protect the rubber.

In buying braided elastic, you can get either the flat or the tubular. The rubber threads run lengthwise in the flat elastic, and have the cotton covering running diagonally over and under the elastic threads.

In the round elastic the braid is tubular, with a strand of rubber running through the center; you can also buy a combination of the flat and the round called "oval elastic."

When it comes to comparing the woven and braided elastic there is one difference that should be pointed out. Woven elastic can only stretch as far as the length of the warp threads, while braided elastic stretches much farther. So you can readily see that the strain and wear on braided elastic would naturally be much greater. If you are buying the wider widths, then, you would expect more satisfactory service from the woven elastic. But when a smaller elastic is wanted, the braided type is especially good, as it gives a neater, more finished appearance.

Experience has proved that heat, light and grease cause rubber to deteriorate very rapidly, and a note made of that fact may be a very material factor in prolonging the life of your elastic.

Poke-Bonnet Typo.

A veritable Victorian bonnet of pale green silk is one of the sort of hats young girls are wearing today. It is of the poke-bonnet type, but much smaller and fits very closely to the head. Usually the trimming is of flowers and fruit combined.

ARRESTED ON SERIOUS CHARGE

Justice is moving swiftly in the case of Willis Mastathis, 27, a Greek by birth, who was arrested a week ago in Philipsburg, charged with seducing Miss Catherine Musser, 17-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Musser, Gettysburg, by State authorities, and with violating a section of the Mann act by Federal authorities. The more serious charge taking precedence over the lesser with the consent of District Attorney Topper, a preliminary hearing for Mastathis has been fixed by U. S. Commissioner Wible, for Thursday afternoon, in the Commissioner's office in Gettysburg. Six witnesses, it is learned, have been subpoenaed for the hearing, including Miss Musser's parents, several relatives of the girl and a brakeman on the Gettysburg branch of the P. & R. RR.

The warrant charging Mastathis with violation of Section 8815, one of the most serious under the Mann act, was served on the Greek Saturday by Deputy U. S. Marshal A. J. Herr, of Harrisburg, after it had been sworn out before Commissioner Wible. The charge against Mastathis is doubly serious, since the person transported out of the State in this case is under eighteen years of age. Bail was fixed at $10,000. Today's hearing is the first under the Mann act to be held in Adams county, it is said.

The Greek, who in his confession says he was married in Michigan in 1914, is alleged to have taken Miss Musser from Harrisburg to Washington, D. C., last month, residing in the latter place with her as husband and wife.

Mastathis was arrested in Philipsburg where he had gone to visit a brother, who runs a restaurant there. Learning of his arrest, Miss Musser returned to Gettysburg to defend the accused man, it is said. She was arrested on a charge of incorrigibility, and is being held at the county jail. Miss Musser graduated from the Gettysburg High School last June near the head of her class.

Mr. and Mrs. John Forry and family, of Gettysburg; Mr. and Mrs. Levi Rinehart and daughter, Belle, York; Miss Irene Herman of Guldens; Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McDermitt and son, George, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Monroe Nell, of New Oxford, spent Sunday with W. C. Carl, of Guldens.

Mrs. Emma Shelleman, West High street, spent several days with her son, George, at Hampton. Samuel Weikert, wife and son, Barney, and Mrs. Jas. Frazier and 2 daughters, Bertha and Ada, Gettysburg, spent Sunday at Mrs. Shelleman's.

Russell J. Ruff and mother, Mrs. C. A. Ruff, Lincoln Way, East, spent several days of last week at Washington, D. C. and Mt. Vernon Va. After visiting his parents here for several weeks Russell returned to Pittsburgh Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. William Gulden and Mr. and Mrs. Francis Snyder and daughter, Doris, of Harrisburg, and Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Gulden, of Hanover st., spent Sunday at the home of Chas. Sadler and family, of Lincoln Way E.

Wm. Deardorff, wife and daughter, Bernice, and Chas. Deardorff and wife, of York, were recent visitors at J. Frank March's, New Chester.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hunt and son, Spurgeon, F. J. Dunn and Sarah E. Bupp, Cedar Ridge, motored to Harrisburg on Saturday.

Miss Lorraine Chronister, of New Oxford, spent the weekend with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Chronister, near Locust Lane.

Miss Frances Robinson, of Hanover street, spent a few days last week with her aunt, Mrs. Joseph Smith, at Irishtown.

Marks Wolford and family, Carlisle street, and Paul Anthony and family, East Berlin, spent Sunday at Ft. Loudon.

Miss Esther Bevenour, Kohlers, spent several days last week in Baltimore.

Miss Blanche Lingg, Emmitsburg, spent Sunday at her home here.

CHARGE TWO WITH STEALING CHICKENS

Charged with stealing chickens valued at from $75 to $100 from the farm of J. E. Haverstock, of Helderburg, Edw. Harman, Tyrone township, and Wirt Einlet, of near York Springs, were arrested Wednesday afternoon by Constable Wilson, assisted by Private Weston of the State police. In default of $500 bail each, Harman and Einlet were lodged in the Adams county jail awaiting a hearing Friday morning.

Harman and Einlet, at a preliminary hearing Friday before Justice Hill, in default of $500 each, were returned to the Adams county jail to await the grand jury of the November term.

Raymond Stock, Abbottstown, was working alone on the roof of a silo owned by Dr. T. C. Miller, by whom he is employed, when he slipped and fell, on Thursday. At the edge of the roof his foot caught in the spouting and the young man hung suspended with his head downward. His frantic calls for help brought no response and Stock slowly became unconscious as the blood rushed to his head. A short time later he was rescued by citizens who passed the silo and found him hanging unconscious from the roof. Later he was seized by spasms but is reported to have recovered.

Saturday evening a week the 10-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur S. Dayhoff, of near Silver Run, was knocked down by the automobile of Samuel Wildasin, when she was crossing the street in front of the Littlestown Inn. The child had the ligaments in her right arm torn loose. She was bruised about the head and face and her ankle sprained. She was taken to the office of Dr. Crouse, where she was unconscious for a short time. She was then removed to her home, where she has recovered.

The following are the rural pupils now attending the East Berlin High School: Kathryn and John Kunkle, Archie Himes, Bertha Lau, Margaret and Marie Ruth, of Paradise township; Anna Hull and Charles Eisenhart, Washington township; Liorance Kimmel, Evelyn, Lester, Kenneth and Vernon Yohe, Hamilton township; Mary Anderson, Florence King, Lattimore township; Beulah Doyle, Mary Weigand, Hilda Winand, Blanche Joseph, Mabel Wolf, Carolyn Myers, of Reading township.

A SAFE TEST

For those who are in need of a remedy for kidney troubles and backache, it is a good plan to try Doan's Kidney Pills. They are strongly recommended by people in this vicinity.

Robert J. Cook, 245 N. Stratton St., Gettysburg, Pa., says: "My kidneys got out of fix. I felt mighty lame in the small of my back mornings and when I tried to bend sharp, stinging pains ran through my back. When I went to lift anything a pain cut me in my back which felt as if it were pulling me down. My kidneys seemed congested and were inactive. Doan's Kidney Pills had been used in my family so I got some. They went right to the trouble and fixed me up and put my kidneys in good condition again." 60c, at all dealers. Rumors that the Snelbaker shirt factory in York Springs would be closed in the near future is without any foundation according to B. F. Snelbaker, owner and manager. All preliminary work will be done at the York Springs factory and garments will be completed at Dillsburg.

BOY BITES KIDNAPPER

A tale of an alleged dusky intruder, who attempted to kidnap a 12-year-old boy who discovered his presence in the house and who was badly bitten as a result, is told by Mrs. J. R. Showvaker, Gettysburg, whose son, George, was the victim of the harrowing experience Tuesday night a week. Mrs. Showvaker says that George was awakened about 9 by footsteps, and sat up in bed. Before he could utter a sound, the boy says he was seized, a hand was placed over his mouth, and someone, who George thinks was a negro, carried him out through the window at the back of the house into the yard. At this juncture George became frantic, and severely bit the hand of his would-be kidnapper. He was then able to break away and leap the fence into the yard back of the McCan store next door. Entering the store, the boy was too badly frightened to relate his experiences for nearly an hour, and by that time no trace of the intruder could be found. Nothing in the house was disturbed.

Within the next few weeks moving pictures will be taken of Gettysburg schools, streets, battlefields, banks, stores and industries. R. W. Gross, a representative of the Imperial Motion Picture Company, Washington, D. C., was in the county seat recently making arrangements for the arrival of the cameramen, moving picture cameras, studio lights and other equipment. In all, three reels of film will be taken. Almost everything and everybody of importance in the town will be "shot," as they say in movie parlance. The films will be in natural colors. When the films have been developed, they will be brought back to Gettysburg and shown at a theatre. Similar films of other towns in the United States will be taken. When the circuit of the United States is completed, the pictures are to be sent back to the Gettysburg C. of C. as a gift of the film producing company. They can then be used for advertising purposes it is pointed out.

By a change in the statutes made by the 1923 State legislature, registry-assessors will receive $5 a day compensation for attendance at all future primaries and elections, it is announced at the commissioners' office. In the past the registry assessors received $1 for their services.

Cleveland Strang, of Liberty township, was taken into custody on Friday by Corporal Dahlstrom, of the State police, charged with defrauding Edith Boyer, of Middletown, of a board bill. Strang was taken to the Adams county jail to await the Dauphin county authorities.

J. Paxton Bigham, manager of the Adams County Hardware Company, is recovering from the effects of a broken rib suffered a week ago. Mr. Bigham was working at his car when he fell, breaking a rib on his right side.

Mrs. Wm. Rodkey, residing near Brushtown, who sprained her back about a week ago in a fall from a plum tree, is able to be about again. Jacob Nickey, Abbottstown, killed a copperhead snake which measured 2 feet, 9 inches, recently.

SO. MOUNTAIN FAIR NEXT WEEK

The big South Mountain fair which is to be held at Arendtsville, September 25 and 26, and which bans all fakirs, all midway attractions and other things of that nature, will have plenty of other things to take the place of these ordinary attributes of such an exhibition. The committee has employed three bands, those from the Loysville orphans' home, and from Gettysburg and Biglerville. All sorts of contests will be held during the two days, one of them being to decide the champion horseshoe pitcher in the county. A medal will be awarded the winner. The fair is unique in its entertainment features and stands high in the merits of its displays. The attendance is usually as large as that at other attractions of the same kind in this county.

Invitations have been sent to the principals of all the high schools of Adams county to have their schools participate in the livestock judging contest to be held at the South Mountain Fair on September 25 and 26. The large silver loving cup which was presented by the Gettysburg Chamber of Commerce and the Adams County Farm Bureau will again be the prize in the competition. This cup must be won three times before it becomes the permanent property of the winner. Biglerville and Littlestown each have a leg on the silver cup. Both will enter teams.

Many reservations have been made for the poultry exhibits at the South Mountain Fair, which is to be held at Arendtsville, Tuesday and Wednesday. This department is in charge of D. C. Jacobs, of Arendtsville. In the preliminary list for Dept. 4, D. C. Jacobs is chairman, and Prof. Monroe, of Pennsylvania State College, is named as judge of the exhibits. The show will be run under the latest revised official rules of the American Poultry Association.

Mrs. Calvin Hoffman, head of the culinary division of the big fair which will be held on September 25th and 26th at Arendtsville Union Park, is busily engaged in securing entries for the home department. In the culinary division there are fifty-five separate classes. These make up the nine distinct groups of kitchen products which will be on display.

Protect Your Automobile with a Fireproof Garage

Keeping your automobile in the barn or a shed is dangerous business. Think of your loss in case of fire; loss of car and barn, and everything in and near the barn. Protect all these by keeping your car, and all the oil, gasoline and other supplies, in a fireproof garage. You expect to have a car for a long time, either the present one or a new one. A good car is too valuable to take chances with; too good to leave outside where the weather will soon ruin it. Build a fireproof garage of concrete and be safe. Besides, insurance rates jump up high unless your car is properly protected.

We can help you build a Concrete Garage. We have plans for Block, Stucco and Monolithic (poured) garages which you can have without charge. And we will help you figure your cost down low if you want to build it yourself; or put you in touch with a reliable contractor who will do it for you at small expense. Ask us about it next time you are around this way. But don't keep your car in a firetrap!

ACCIDENT AT TANEYTOWN FAIR

At the Taneytown Fair Ground on Thursday the Sea-plane attraction toppled over, while running full speed. It is said that it was carrying about twenty riders at the time, six of which were severely hurt: Naomi Rodkey, Margaret Halter, Ethel Cummings, LeVine Carbaugh, William Harmon and Frank Sargent. Several others received lesser injuries. It is said that the contrivance was insecurely erected, the foundation being built up with blocks of wood, and when the planes were set going the guy wires were not sufficient to hold the machine to its base, with the result that the riders toppled over, carrying with them the contrivance. The operator of the affair is reported to have left for parts unknown, soon after the accident.

Miss Halter, the most seriously hurt and is believed to have suffered internal injuries. The other five are suffering from cuts about the head, bruises and sprains. No legal action has yet been taken against the owners of the concession. Fair association officials disclaim any liability for the injuries to the six persons, saying the blame rests solely with the operator of the device.

Decision to organize Adams county as a member of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Federation was reached at a meeting in the court house, Wednesday evening, with 50 rural residents from various parts of the county attending. An organization committee, with power to enlarge itself, was appointed by John C. Bream, acting chairman of the gathering, with the following members: C. A. Griest, chairman; D. M. Sheely, E. N. Rhodes, George E. Motter, A. B. C. Williams and John C. Bream. The yearly dues were fixed at $10. Work of enrolling the farmers of the county in what apparently is a farmers' union will be started shortly. John C. Brubaker, of Lancaster, president of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau Federation and head of the Farm Bureau of Lancaster county, asserted it was the problem of the Farm Bureau to see not only that more and better crops and livestock are raised, but that by cooperation and organization the farmers get better prices through collective bargaining, at the same time buying as cheaply as possible those things commonly used in farming.

iff Gross and County Commissioner Frey get together and change alleged unsatisfactory conditions at the

it is said that Judge Gordon will take getting soup and bread as a steady diet with an expenditure of 18 cents a day per prisoner." Sheriff Gross explained to the Judge that he did not have certain things at the county jail because the commissioners would not co-operate and get the articles. The commissioners agreed to give the prisoners better accommodations and will surcharge the counties from which the prisoners were sentenced. Major Wynn, chief detec-

he learned the treatment of prison-

For pimples, black-heads, freckles, blotches, and tan, as well as for more serious face, scalp and body eruptions, hives, eczema, etc., use this scientific compound of sulphur. As a lotion, it soothes and heals; taken internally, a few drops in a glass of water—it gets at the root of the trouble and purifies the blood. Physicians agree that sulphur is one of the most effective blood purifiers known. Remember, a good complexion isn't skin deep—it's health deep.

RATHER SPOILED THE EFFECT

Unfortunate That Proud Driver of Car Should Have Forgotten to Remove That Pail.

They were talking about embarrassing moments at the Friday Morning club when one fair matron remarked:

"While living in a small western town a few years ago, my husband purchased an automobile. Upon inspecting our garage I discovered a leak in the roof and, to save the new machine from a possible drenching, I placed a five-gallon pail on top of it. "Several days later I motored to town, all puffed up with pride, unaware that the pail was still on top of the car, and it surely was my most embarrassing moment when I parked near a dairy and a kind stranger offered to take the milk pail down for me."

Feeling Was Mutual.

Billie had been a naughty boy and upon rising in the morning his mother said, "Now, Billie, you were a bad boy yesterday and I hope you will be better today. Yesterday nobody liked you."

"That's all right, mother," said Billie; "yesterday I didn't like myself."

CAP AND BELLS

ONLY A DETAIL

Little Jackle was spending a holiday in the country and was highly entertained by everything he saw in the barn and farmyard.

The old red hen's cackle to announce that she had laid an egg was a never-failing source of delight. He always wanted someone to get the egg immediately.

One day he was allowed the privilege of going all by himself to fetch the treasure.

In a few minutes he came running back excitedly, but his eagerness was too great. He tripped and fell.

In a minute his hands and blouse were smeared with yellow as he clutched bits of broken shell.

But he came up smiling to his mother.

"Oh, mummy," he cried, as he held up the fragments, "I had a fall, but it's all right, 'cause I didn't lose anything only the juice!"

AS WILLIE HEARD IT

Guess Mr. Brown'll be disappointed with his trip, pa."

"Why, Willie?"

"He said he was only going for the week, but knew he'd get strong."

Dish-honored. He often looks disheveled. It makes one feel suspicious. That when he looks disheveled, His wife has been throwing dishes.

Solved.

"Doctor, can you cure me from snoring?"

"Yes, but I snore so loud that I awaken myself!"

"Well, the best thing is to sleep in another room."

A Thing That Rarely Palls.

Madge—Then you believe in marrying for money?

Marie—Oh, I wouldn't say that exactly; but when you marry a man it's just as well to know for sure that there's something about him you will always like.

"Will you appraise my engagement ring for me?"

"What kind of a stone is this supposed to be?" asked the jeweler.

"Turkwalis."

"Turk was, maybe, but not now. This is glass."

"No, we have marked a few jokes for him to use on the jury. He has no sense of humor himself."

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

PLEASE REMEMBER

Little Margery wished to talk over the telephone with her mother, who was visiting a friend, so her elder sister gave her the phone number and let her call the exchange.

It was such a lovely talk that Margery was impatient to hear her mother's voice again over the wire.

A few days after this conversation, when the mother was paying another visit to the same friend, the older sister overheard Margery at the telephone. Exchange evidently had been asking for the number and Margery was explaining vehemently:

"Exchange, I want the number I had Thursday. Don't you understand? The same number."

Willie—I'll bet one thing.

Visitor—What?

Willie—I'll bet you're no relation of father's.

Fast Work.

A lady who had just received an interesting bit of news said to her little daughter: "Marjorie, dear, auntie has a new baby, and now mamma is the baby's aunt, papa is the baby's uncle, and you are her little cousin."

"First rate, if the young lady on the door below did not think it necessary to carry the flat idea into her singing."

KILLS MAN AFTER ATTACK ON WIFE

Canadian Mill Manager in Hand-to-Hand Death-Struggle With Crazy Chinaman.

MADE MAD BY THUNDER

Aldergrove, B. C.—Full details of the struggle between Anthony Rerrie, mill manager, and Yung Sing, an insane Chinese mill hand, which resulted in the death of the oriental, were brought to light at the inquest. The verdict of the coroner's jury was that Mr. Rerrie had fired in self-defense.

Wakened about 4 o'clock one morning by hearing some one prowling about the house, knocking at the doors and windows, Mr. Rerrie got out of bed and went to investigate. While walking from the rear of the house toward the front he heard Mrs. Rerrie scream. Rushing into the house, he was horrified to see a Chinaman attacking her. He had already torn a part of the clothing from the bed, and Mrs. Rerrie was struggling with him.

Husband Attacks Chinaman.

Mr. Rerrie jumped on the Chinaman, who, it transpired later, had been driven insane by the thunderstorm the previous evening and who was possessed of the terrific strength of a lunatic. The oriental turned and clinched with the white man, and together they struggled and fought about the bedroom.

Mrs. Rerrie was only recently operated upon and has been in a very nervous condition since her illness. Their small daughter, nine years old, hearing the struggle, came to the aid of her father, using her ineffective efforts to assist him by pounding the Chinaman's back.

"Get your revolver!" screamed Mrs. Rerrie, and, throwing the Chinaman from him, the lumberman sprang to the bureau, where he kept his gun. As soon as he loosened his hold the maniac again attacked Mrs. Rerrie.

Fires Several Shots.

The husband jumped at him again, and struck him. The lunatic was driven toward the door. Rushing him, Rerrie forced the Chinaman outside, and followed to drive him off the premises. The Chinaman turned and ran, and Rerrie fired several shots into the ground to awaken the mill workers and effect the capture of the lunatic.

After running a short distance, Yung Sing wheeled about and, picking up a piece of 2 by 4 timber, rushed at the white man, with the heavy stick uplifted. Rerrie fired low. The bullet struck the Chinaman in the abdomen and severed an artery.

Yung Sing stumbled and fell when struck. It was evident at once that his life was in danger.

In the meantime Mrs. Rerrie had staggered from her bed to the telephone and was frantically endeavoring to rouse the police. This was accomplished, as her husband came back and sent a message for a doctor.

Sleeping Man Falls Forty

Feet, but Only Gets Bump

While sitting on the stone rail of a bridge at Excelsior Springs, Mo., Ernest Boyer fell asleep and fell 40 feet on the soft ground, his head just missing a projecting iron pipe.

A patrolman, thinking Boyer was dead, notified an undertaker and descended with him to the place where Boyer lay. On their arrival Boyer jumped to his feet, having suffered only a bump on the head.

GIRL JILTED AT ALTAR IN A CROWDED CHURCH

Man Gives Emphatic "No" to Important Question and Walks Out of Building

New Britain, Conn.—For seven years John Zielinski and Miss Josephine Tkacz have been keeping company, with each other.

A few weeks ago they were engaged to be married. Today Miss Tkacz, having purchased an elaborate trousseau and bought the bridal bouquet, happily joined her fiance in a taxicab ride to the Sacred Heart church. Both seemed radiant joy.

The young woman paid the cab fare. Together they presented themselves in front of the altar. The clergyman opened his prayer book. The marriage ceremony was begun. The Rev. Alexander Kowalczyk asked the prospective bridegroom:

"Do you take Josephine for your lawful wife?"

To which Joseph firmly and distinctly shouted:

"No!"

A large congregation, including the young woman's theretofore beaming relatives, was aghast. The clergyman wasn't sure that he had heard aright. He put the question again. Again came the "No!"

Joseph turned to the spectators and said:

"I know what I am saying. I hereby inform all of you people that I don't want to marry this woman, and I'm not going to!"

The bride-to-be fainted. The clergyman closed the prayer book, Joseph strode firmly down the aisle and into the open. Amid deep silence the awed congregation sat for a while, and then filtered out of the church.

Pilfering Cat Soundly

Whipped by Alligator

Lawrence, Kan.—"The bully of Kentucky street" was Tom, a ten-year-old, 13-pound, snow-white cat, belonging to George Melvin, a Lawrence lawyer. Tom was not particularly mean, but his size and voracious appetite always assured him of a meal.

Napoleon had his Waterloo, Tom his water tub.

Last winter, in New Orleans, Melvin acquired a young alligator, "Ally." Ally's home was in the old family wash tub.

Ally liked raw meat. So did Tom. As a result, when meat was placed on the rocks in the tub, whereon Ally basked, the reptile would get about one bite and Tom the rest. Tom would even hop into the water after it.

The other day Ally's supper was placed in the tub and Tom jumped in for his share. The alligator leaped across the tub and clamped his long jaws on something white and furry. Tom got out of the tub, all right; also got "off" pilfering Ally's fare.

Boy Stowaway Is Saved

After 14 Hours in Sea

Portland, Me.—Drifting 14 hours, encased in a life preserver and unconscious when picked up, a Dutch lad whose name is not recalled, was rescued by Captain Gleason of the six-masted schooner Wyoming on her last trip to Norfolk, he reported here.

Mate Howard Williams located a drifting object near the vessel about 10:30 one night and was impressed that it was alive.

The ship hoisted to and the tender sought to pick up the object, William Snow, first mate, going out therein and hauling the lad over the side. He came to when restoratives were applied on the ship and said he had jumped off a Dutch freighter when he sighted land at entrance to Chesapeake bay.

First he secured the life preserver and his duffel bag was tied around his neck. He was a stowaway and Captain Gleason put him ashore at Norfolk for the port officials to care for.

Youth Wins Case After

Fourteen Court Battles

Mt. Vernon, N. Y.—After fourteen legal battles in different courts since 1913, William G. O'Connor, who lost four fingers while operating a meat grinder, has been awarded $20,000 damages from Richard Weber, Jr., New York city butcher.

O'Connor was an errand boy in Weber's meat shop in 1913. He was ordered to grind some meat, and during the operation lost four fingers when his hand slipped.

The lad's father filed suit for $50,000 damages and then began the first of the fourteen legal fights.

MRS. BUTLER'S AGES AND PAINS

Vanished After Using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

W. Philadelphia, Pa.—"When I cleaned house last April I must have overfired, for after that I had pains and aches all the time and was so discouraged. I could hardly do my own housework, and I couldn't carry a basket of groceries from the store nor walk even four or five squares without getting terrible pains in my back and abdomen and lower limbs."

I went to visit a friend in Mt. Holly, N. J., and she said, 'Mrs. Butler, why don't you take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?' My husband said that if it did her so much good for the same trouble, I should try it. So I have taken it and it is doing me good. Whenever I feel heavy or bad, it puts me right on my feet again. I am able to do my work with pleasure and am getting strong and stout. I still take the Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and am using Lydia E. Uncommon Sense . . .

By JOHN BLAKE

NEGLECTED GENIUS

ONE of the best-known of modern poets, ill and destitute after a lifetime of toil, announces cheerfully that he is emphatically not a neglected genius.

True, he has no money, but it was not money that he worked for. His fame is perhaps not as great as his talent merited, but he did not work for fame. He worked for the joy of working, and that was enough.

He looks back upon life feeling that it brought him all that he could ask. Genius is not neglected any more than diamonds are neglected, and for the same reason. This man, had he chosen, could now be comfortably supplied with money.

We believe that he should have been. Every man owes it to himself to gain independence, and money means independence. Our poet's celebrity could have been coined into

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

WITH FLYING COLORS

IF YOU wish in your particular sphere of endeavor to reach a destination of more than ordinary importance, press untiringly forward in all kinds of weather.

Let neither heat nor cold deter or swerve you from your purpose when once you have decided your course. Pay no attention to the sneers of the frivolous. Keep your mind firmly fixed on your resolve and march resolutely ahead.

There will be times when you will be exhausted, footsore and discouraged; when opposing winds beat furiously and you seem to lack sufficient strength to make another step forward. When these depressing periods overtake you, sit down and rest awhile.

Ever remember that to get the best it is necessary to give the best. Do not offend those beneath you with gruff words. Be uniformly courteous. Break no promise. Withhold judgment. Be fair in business and keep off the velvety grass-grown plot of your neighbor.

The perplexities that vex your spirit are familiar to all humanity in all walks of life. No one by any manner of means can escape them, but it is possible for anyone to overcome them.

Use your mind. Be a rational being. By patience, well-doing and faith, turn your threatened defeat into victory. Thousands of noble men and women who have passed this way before you, thus obtained mastery over themselves, scarred outwardly with the wounds of battle, but unblemished within.

Use your hands in righteous work; your eyes to look up to the beautiful arch overhead; your ears to hear good; your tongue to praise God and to cheer and encourage others less fortunate than yourself.

Rather than condemn, hold your peace.

Purge your heart of covetousness and hate.

Envy is a useless waste of energy which produces only mischief and enough cash to ease his old age, but if he preferred to neglect his opportunities it is nobody's business but his own.

It is his absence of bitterness that is worth heeding. He has discovered, what every other man should discover, that no earnest effort is wasted. He has learned that people are only too ready to recognize genius when they find it, and to reward it when they recognize it.

Indeed, so keen is the hunt for genius that hundreds of near-geniuses grow prosperous in America as soon as they betray the least sign of talent.

Publishers and producers hunt for men who can write. Great corporations send out scouts for men with executive or engineering ability that is beyond the common order.

No musician who is really gifted ever falls of an audience. And even industrious mediocrity will sometimes be mistaken for genius and have riches thrust upon it.

Cast the fear that you may be a neglected genius from among your worries. If you are a genius somebody will find it out, and you will have to hire an office boy to keep people from invading your privacy.

Even if you are not a genius you are likely to be mistaken for one. But that will not harm you unless you make the mistake yourself. Be careful not to do that, for it will be fatal. (© by John Blake.)

PERFECT DAYS ALWAYS

By GRACE E. HALL

THERE isn't a day in the whole round year

That isn't a perfect day; Measured and tried and pointed with gold,

It glides on its destined way; It is one of the gems that is given you—

A pearl in life's necklace rare, And it hasn't a scar and it hasn't a mar—

Unless you have made it there.

The sun cannot shine every day of your life,

But the soft clouds have their place;

If all of the hours were a glitter and shine,

You would weary in each day's race;

For the eyes must be old and the soul must feel

The peace of these quiet grays,

That soften the light and refresh our sight,

After the burning rays.

There is beauty abundant for every need

In every day of the year;

If you cannot see it, you're blind indeed.

For beauty is ever near;

Whatever your lot, you may freely share

In the paintings of earth and sky;

They are wondrous in worth and there's never a dearth

Of charm—for the seeing eye. (© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS

"PORK-BARREL"

WHEN, in the midst of a congressional discussion upon some measure which entails the expenditure of large sums of money in different parts of the country—for example, the rivers and harbors bill—one member will denounce the bill as a "poorly disguised pork-barrel," the meaning is at once apparent to anyone familiar with American parliamentary slang, for it has come to be the accepted equivalent of an attempt to secure public money for private or semi-private purposes. A "pork-barrel" measure, therefore, is one which would enrich certain districts at the expense of the public treasury, either by providing for costly improvements or by spending money unnecessarily.

To find the genesis of the phrase we have to go back to the earlier days of the republic, when the majority of the citizens were farmers who, during the winter, were forced to live on salt pork. If their supply was adequate and their barrels well filled, they said they had no need to worry about a long, hard winter—the pork-barrel would take care of them. In a similar, but more metaphorical sense, they now look to their congressmen to take care of them by securing at least a portion of the "pork-barrel" legislation, which will lead to profits on labor, land and supplies. Struggled Hard for Life.

Strange evidence was given by the house surgeon at a Barrow (Eng.) hospital at the inquest of an eight-year-old boy. The boy died from lockjaw caused by falling and cutting his wrist on a tin. The surgeon said he died three times. He stopped breathing twice and animation was restored twice. The third time he stopped breathing it was that!

Why He Called It "Portland" Cement

In 1824, an English mason wanted to produce a better cement than any then in use. To do this he burned finely ground clay and limestone together at a high heat. The hard balls [called clinker] that resulted were ground to a fine powder. When a mixture of this dull gray powder with water had hardened, it was the color of a popular building stone quarried on the Isle of Portland off the coast of England. So this mason, Joseph Aspdin, called his discovery "portland" cement.

That was less than one hundred years ago.

Portland cement was not made in the United States until fifty years ago. The average annual production for the ten years following was only 36,000 sacks. Last year the country used over 470,000,000 sacks of portland cement. Capacity to manufacture was nearly 600,000,000 sacks.

Cement cannot be made everywhere because raw materials of the necessary chemical composition are not found in sufficient quantities in every part of the country. But it is now manufactured in 27 states by 120 plants. There is at least one of these plants within shipping distance of any community in this country.

To provide a cement supply that would always be ample to meet demand has meant a good deal in costly experience to those who have invested in the cement industry. There have been large capital investments with low returns.

In the last twenty-five years, 328 cement plants have been built or have gone through some stage of construction or financing. 162 were completed and placed in operation.

Only 120 of these plants have survived the financial, operating and marketing risks of that period. Their capacity is nearly 30 per cent greater than the record year's demand.

These are a few important facts about an industry that is still young. Advertisements to follow will give you more of these facts, and will tell something of the important place cement occupies in the welfare of every individual.

RED LION KLANSMEN

RETURN EVICTED GOODS

Five masked and hooded men, with the insignia of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan on the left breast, Monday morning put furniture, which had been put out on the curb by ejection proceedings, back into a house in Dallastown. The furniture is the property of Mrs. John H. Speck, who has been living in the house, which she claims rightfully belongs to her. John W. Minnich, Burgess of Dallastown, has in his possession the deed to the property. He has been seeking for some time to have Mrs. Speck move from the house. With papers, which appeared to be legally drawn, in his possession Deputy Sheriff Fickes on Saturday put the furniture out of the house. Fully 5,000 persons gathered at the house early Sunday night, and several thousand remained until an early hour Monday morning to see the members of the Ku Klux Klan, from Red Lion, put the furniture into the house. Five men, coming thru the back yard of the house, quietly went to the front of the house, and without any interference began moving the furniture. Many of the younger persons in the mob of citizens assisted in the moving. In less than twenty minutes nearly every piece of furniture was in the house, and as swiftly and silently as the hooded men came, they left by the back way, running through the yard to a machine which was parked in the alley at the rear of the lot. Mr. Speck claimed that Mr. Minnich had presented Mrs. Speck, then Miss Smith, with the house, but had never given her the deed to the property.

Mr. Minnich said that his son, Chauncey, and not he, had given the house to Mrs. Speck. The transfer of the property to Mrs. Speck was only verbal. It is claimed that the deed is in Mr. Minnich's name, but the house is assessed in Mrs. Speck's name.

The Specks have arranged their furniture, and are living in the house as before the ejection. Whose move next? asks Dallastown.
